Re: Acme Printed Circuit Board Assembly; Stephen Yun

To Whom It May Concern:

I own a small business with a highly specialized product requiring several PCB's. For many years we have insourced our PCB work due to the relatively low volume of our electronics needs. Starting in 2008 we developed a product requiring too many in-house resources and started a search for a contract PCB assembly company.

We found Acme PCB Assembly (Acme) along with over 25 other qualified candidate companies. Stephen Yun was our contact with Acme and was very helpful with our initial outsourcing project. Stephen provided a very competitive quote on this 100% RoHS through hole job. As one who generally believes "you get what you pay for", I was concerned about the quality of the work I would receive due to the excellent pricing relative to some of their competitors. I chose to give Acme a try. To my pleasure, our first job arrived and exceeded my expectations in every way. Our boards were professionally packed, the timeline quoted was exceeded, and of a few boards that were missing a part (due to a shortage that was 100% my fault) each was individually tagged and each individual component location marked making post work on those boards a breeze. The craftsmanship was my biggest concern and again my expectations were completely exceeded. This initial job included several non-standard part configurations (parts on side, special bends on LEDs, components close to the board edge, etc.). Every board was built properly, to my spec. We had a 0% reject on the completed boards in that job. Outstanding.

Since that time we have had other boards made including panelized, RoHS, mixed component type (90% SMT and 10% through hole) boards again, with more unusual parts, mounting, and non-standard details. These jobs have also been completed as above, on time, with excellent craftsmanship, and to my complete satisfaction. Acme has continued to exceed my expectations with their craftsmanship, and very important to my small business, affordable, competitive pricing.

Based on my experience to date, I can recommend Acme without reservation. I could only wish all of my suppliers did as well. I would invite anyone to ask about my experience with Acme.
